

Nerve Root Injection

The Department of Radiology provides a comprehensive range of imaging services, both diagnostic and image-guided interventional procedures to diagnose and treat many medical conditions. Using advanced imaging equipment, our qualified and experienced radiologists and radiographers perform a variety of examinations, from basic X-rays to more complex MRI and CT scans.

What is Nerve Root Injection?

Nerve root Injection is primarily used to diagnose the specific source of nerve root pain and, secondarily, for therapeutic relief of lower back and/or leg pain.

What can I expect?

- You will need to change into a hospital patient gown.
- Prior to the injection, you will be asked to rate your pain on a scale of 0-10, 10 being the most painful.
- Lying on a couch (facing up or down), a radiographer will position you for the scan.
- It is important to stay still once you are positioned.
- You will be given local anaesthesia.

- A physician makes use of X-ray guidance (fluoroscopy) to direct a very small needle into the nerve root sheath. Like all spinal injections, nerve root injections are best performed using fluoroscopy (live X-ray) to properly guide and place the needle, and to avoid a nerve injury or other injury.
- A small amount of contrast dye is injected to confirm that the needle is in the joint and that medication is contained inside the joint.
- Following this, a small mixture of anaesthetic (such as lidocaine) and anti-inflammatory medication (steroid/cortisone) is slowly injected into the joint.
- This procedure runs a small risk of bleeding, infection, or allergic reaction.
- You may resume regular activities the next day.

How long is the procedure?

The injection takes a few minutes, but the whole procedure lasts between fifteen to thirty minutes.

How should I prepare?

- You will need to fast two hours before the procedure.
- Avoid doing strenuous activities.
- Avoid driving.
- Medical conditions like diabetes, hypertension or anticoagulant (blood thinning) therapy will need to be managed before the procedure.
- You may continue to take your regular pain medication after the procedure.

Important points to note

- Please inform the radiographer if you suspect you may be pregnant.
- Please be punctual. Any delay will affect the schedule of other patients, and your appointment may need to be rescheduled.
- Please inform the Radiology department at 6716 2184/6716 2001 if you cannot keep the appointment.
